As ISU Library, we believe in the importance of lifelong learning, and we are working to ensure the success of both library staff and every member of the Istinye University Family. As we move forward without slowing down on the path of a research university, we make our plans by being aware of the importance of information and what the correct evaluation of information will contribute to us.

In the 19th issue of the ISU Library Bulletin, we have provided introductory information about library services and suggestions that we believe will be of interest to you in the Librarian's Suggestions column. In these days of high working tempo and high temperatures, I would like to wish a good holiday to all our academicians, administrative staff and students who are on leave and with their families, and I would like to state that we look forward to the new academic term and our users.

Best regards,

MUSEUM

ARCHAEOLOGICAL MUSEUM

Istanbul Archaeological Museums is a complex of museums consisting of three main units. The Archaeological Museum, the Museum of Ancient Oriental Art and the Tiled Pavilion Museum. The Istanbul Archaeological Museums, Turkey's first museum, has nearly one million artefacts from various cultures brought from the lands of the empire.

The interest in collecting historical artefacts in the Ottoman Empire dates back to the reign of Sultan Mehmet the Conqueror, but the institutionalisation of museology coincides with the establishment of the Istanbul Archaeological Museums in 1869 as the 'Museum-i Hümayun', the Imperial Museum. The Museum-i Humayun, consisting of archaeological artefacts collected in Hagia Irene Church until that day, forms the basis of the Istanbul Archaeological Museums. When Hagia Irene became insufficient, the 'Tiled Pavilion' built during the reign of Sultan Mehmet the Conqueror was converted into a museum. The Tiled Pavilion, which is still affiliated to the Istanbul Archaeological Museums, was restored and opened to visitors in 1880.

In 1881, with the appointment of Osman Hamdi Bey as the director of the museum, a new era in Turkish museology begins. Osman Hamdi Bey carried out excavations at Nemrud Mountain, Myrina, Kyme and other Aeolian necropolises and the Temple of Hecate in Lagina, and as a result of his excavations in Sidon (Sidon) between 1887 and 1888, he reached the Sidon King Necropolis and returned to Istanbul with many sarcophagi, especially the world-famous Sarcophagus of Alexander.

The oldest building in the Istanbul Archaeological Museums complex (1472 AD) is the Tiled Pavilion. The Tiled Pavilion Museum, where examples of Turkish tiles and ceramics are currently exhibited, is one of the oldest examples of Ottoman civil architecture in Istanbul.

The building, which is used as the Museum of Ancient Oriental Art, was built by Osman Hamdi Bey in 1883 as the Sanayi-i Nefise Mektebi, the Academy of Fine Arts. The architect of the building was Alexander Vallaury, who would later build the Classical building of Istanbul Archaeological Museums. In 1917, when the academy moved to Cağaloğlu, this building was allocated to the directorate of museums.

The Archaeological Museum stands out as one of the rare buildings built as a museum building in the world for its period. It is one of the most beautiful and magnificent examples of Neo-Classical architecture in Istanbul. The Ottoman inscription on the pediment reads 'Asar-ı Atika Museum' (Museum of Antiquities). The tughra above the inscription belongs to Sultan II. Abdülhamid belongs to Sultan Abdülhamid.

Between 1887 and 1888, a new museum building was needed to exhibit the magnificent artefacts brought to Istanbul from the Sidon King Necropolis Excavations carried out by Osman Hamdi Bey, including the Sarcophagus of Alexander, the Sarcophagus of Weeping Women, the Lycian Sarcophagus, and the Tabnit Sarcophagus, and the classical building of the Istanbul Archaeological Museums, built by the famous architect of the period Alexander Vallaury opposite the Tiled Pavilion, was opened to visitors on 13 June 1891.

The halls numbered 1, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 on the lower floor and all of the halls on the upper floor in the buildings of the Istanbul Archaeological Museums Directorate; "Assos Exhibition Hall" on the ground floor of the Annex Building and "Istanbul's Environmental Cultures: Thrace, Bithynia - Byzantium" exhibition halls are closed to visitors.

BOOK

The History of Ideas, the product of Peter Watson's enormous research, is a comprehensive account of human history, of human creativity.

Beginning with the invention of the flint axe two million years ago, this history tells the stories not of emperors and kings, ministers and generals, but of ideas, the cornerstones of humanity's long run. The first languages, the first words, gods, sacrifices, the calendar, time, art, money, writing and economy are distilled from the life stories of inventors, philosophers, musicians, religious leaders, poets and writers.

Written as an alternative to traditional history, this book is not a history of kings, wars, conquests and treaties, but a bedside reference that presents the thought processes behind all the great events recorded in history, and the history of the ideas and inventions that are the products of these processes. The aim of the book, which is presented under five main headings, is, in the words of the author, "to identify and analyse the ideas and inventions that have had a long-term impact on the way we live and think in the past or the present."

A first step towards understanding ourselves and the world we live in, History of Ideas also helps those who wish to continue on their way with its rich bibliography.
